

INT. SURGEON'S OFFICE-DAY

Jenny stands in a hospital gown. She shivers. Her incredibly serious surgeon carefully marks her up for surgery. They draw on her chest, periodically stepping back, evaluating, and stepping forward to draw more. Feeling the full weight of her cancer now more than ever, Jenny tries to make them laugh.

SURGEON

One of the things that you must remember is that your breasts are sisters not twins.

JENNY

So you're saying that now is a good time to stop calling them the Twin Peaks?

SURGEON

I'm saying that following the surgery your breasts will resemble each other but they will not be identical.

JENNY

Got it. Kim and Kourtney, not Mary Kate and Ashley.

SURGEON

Have you made a decision on implant size?

JENNY

Yes. Larger than Jack Black, smaller than Stormy Daniels.

The surgeon is unamused.

JENNY

A c cup please.

SURGEON

You'll be unable to lift your arms above your head for 6 weeks.

JENNY

Got it. I'll change all my lightbulbs before the surgery.

SURGEON

And you cannot lift anything over 5 pounds for at least a month.

JENNY

Whelp, guess I'll be forfeiting my spot on the Olympic bowling team.

SURGEON

When you arrive for surgery prep they will give you Valium in your IV to relax you.

JENNY

IV Valium? Is this a mastectomy or a spa day?

SURGEON

Do you have any other questions, any actual questions?

JENNY

Yes. Does anything make you laugh?

SURGEON

Yes, when people are funny. See you in the OR.
