

EXT. CEMETERY - DAY

Alex visits their mother's grave on the twentieth anniversary of her passing. Standing over her headstone with a bouquet of flowers and a pastry box, Alex hasn't been to visit in 6 years-and struggles to find the right things to say.

ALEX

I brought your favorite cannolis. I can't believe it's been twenty years. A lot has changed. I know you haven't seen me since I was small but I hope you'd be proud of who I am now. I have a girlfriend. She reminds me of you. I wish you could meet her. Her name is Lisa, just missing the E in the front and it'd be your name. Heather's doing great. She moved back into the Walnut Creek house and she's really fixed the place up. You won't believe how much that property is worth now. Let's just say there's more than one comma. Technology's really advanced since you were here...You can literally do everything on your cellphone now. It's pretty wild. And there's barely any cords anymore and everything can be voice controlled. Oh, and they made a sequel to Top Gun. I know it was one of your favorite movies. Somehow, Tom Cruise still looks the same. I'm sorry I don't come visit you more often. There's just nothing in this little town for me anymore. I still think about you all the time though. I just wanted you to know I miss you. And I promise to come see you more. I'll be back again soon. Bye mom. I love you.
